IP AND ARBITRATION

Similar to banks, large IP owners have been slower than some to adopt international arbitration. Lately though, that appears to be changing. So, how can international arbitration be of help in the intellectual property sphere? How can the international arbitration meet the industry's concerns about its usefulness, and what are the peculiarities of the IP disputes that may require creative thinking? And where will the arbitrators be found?

Topics the panelists are expected to address include:

- Reasons IP firms have avoided arbitration, and how many of those are insurmountable
- IP owners who have embraced international arbitration and why. Are there any themes? Is there a US-rest of the world divide?
- The most common types of IP-related arbitrations
- Particular issues in life sciences and molecule development
- Compulsory licensing disputes
- Quantifying damages in patent infringement cases in Pharma
- Covid-19 related IP and life sciences disputes

Moderator:

Kurt Lindquist, Cozen O'Connor

The panel of in-house counsel will discuss questions submitted by the audience and moderator in advance.

GAR LIVE: WOULD YOU CHALLENGE?

Our panel of esteemed practitioners will introduce and then discuss intriguing scenarios, loosely based on their own lives, before asking the audience and other panel members to vote on how they would respond – giving the session its title – before outlining their own solutions. As well as providing lots of food for thought, these sessions offer the chance to benchmark one's own practice and instincts against a group of peers.
